FYI: 30 Day Hold Impound Storage to you the Legal Owner

The legal owner may secure early release of vehicles impounded with a 30 day hold. The legal owner MAY NOT release a vehicle to the registered owner until the 30 days have expired from the date of impound.

The reason for a 30 day hold is usually driving without a license or driving while a license is suspended or permitting someone else to drive your vehicle without a license.

No vehicle may be released after the 30 day hold unless the registered owner produces a valid license or valid temporary license or brings someone with him or her who has a valid driver’s license. It is the responsibility of the agency having custody of the vehicle to insure that this provision of the vehicle code is enforced.

Once the 30 day hold has expired there are two requirements for releasing the vehicle after it has been repossessed, they are that the registered owner pays a $15 fee to the police or sheriff department having jurisdiction. The other requirement pertains to reason for the 30 day hold as described above.

It is the legal owner's responsibility to make sure that these provisions of the vehicle code are being adhered to by those agencies having custody.

We would suggest that repossessed vehicles from impound remain in our custody for the remaining days required by law before it can be sold or redeemed. After that most auctions will pick up the vehicle from us at no charge to you. We will also deliver to any auction within our local coverage area of our storage location at no additional charge.

We will hold your 30 day impounds at a reduced rate to you the legal owner.

In the event your customer redeems the vehicle from our facility the fee would be $20 per day from the date of repossession not the original Impound date! This will insure that all provisions of the vehicle code are in compliance.

Failure to comply has unspecified consequences! This could lead to unnecessary and costly litigation.
